Introduction

A student of traditional animation and late landscape artist Otis "Scotty" McDaniel, Raven Amos is a versatile artist who seeks to challenge herself with every art project she undertakes, whether it's a public art installation, apparel design, or a long-term "world building" project.

Raven's work has been featured in print and online, including Mesozoic Art edited by Steve White and Dr. Darren Naish, The Palaeoartist's Handbook by Dr. Mark Witton, All Your Yesterdays by CM Kosemen, Scientific American Magazine's "Image of the Week" and "Symbiartic" blogs, and several science blogs and YouTube channels dedicated to paleontology-related art and science. More locally, several of Raven's designs adorn the inside of the Farm Exhibits barn at the Alaska State Fair in the form of large-scale murals portraying scenes of the Mat-Su Valley.

Her forays into the world of apparel and product design have also achieved accolades from sites such as Redbubble and Neatoshop as Staff Picks and Featured Designs. Raven brings to her work dedication, flexibility, an eye for detail, and an ability to gain viewers' attention.

Many of Raven's digital paintings are adapted into apparel designs, such as Denali Pterosaur/ Pterosaur Sunset. This design in particular was tapped by Paramount Pictures for possible use in the 2019 Dora the Explorer movie.

Beer Label Design

Homebrewing and paleontology go together like peanut butter and jelly! Dr. Andrew Farke, director of the Raymond M. Alf Museum of Paleontology in Claremont, CA commissioned Raven to create a logo for his homebrewing business for use in reusable Grog Tags, beer tap pulls, and t-shirts.
